Challenging Mainstream Thought About Beauty’s Big Hand in Evolution

By JAMES GORMAN
Last Updated: May 29, 2017

Not long ago, a physicist at Stanford posed a rhetorical question that took me by surprise.

“Why is there so much beauty?” he asked.

Beauty was not what I was thinking the world was full of when he brought it up. The physicist, Manu Prakash, was captivated by

Pets on the Premises? It’s a Hotel Perk
By JESSICA COLLEY CLARKE
Last Updated: 3:00 AM PT

When booking a room, it may not occur to travelers to ask whether a hotel has pets. Yet interaction with animals can improve mental health, and has been shown to ease depression. Some hotels are luring customers with mascots, and not just dogs, but also birds, cats, tortoises and even

An Unexpected Wine Sanctuary in Baja California

By ROBERT DRAPER
Last Updated: April 28, 2017

The vineyard at Bruma Valle de Guadalupe, a small resort that is being expanded by Juan Pablo Arroyuelo, a Mexico City developer. ORIANA KOREN FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

As we drove along the heavily pocked dirt road, bouncing our way through near-total darkness, with no signs to indicate the proximity to our destination—no signs of any sort—the whites of my girlfriend’s eyes were plainly visible in the night as she murmured, “I’m not so sure about this.”
